A little more wedding lore:

Why do brides hold bouquets? What's more romantic than roses and lilies? How about garlic and dill? Bridal bouquets used to be all herbal, likely originating in the time of the Great Plague, when daily health rituals included clutching garlic-scented cloths over one's nose and washing one's clothes in garlic vinegar to repel disease. Over time, as hygiene improved, brides added better smelling blooms to their arrangements.

Why do brides wear white? Queen Victoria can be thanked for popularizing the Christmas tree, the catchphrase "We are not amused," and, yes, the white wedding dress. It had long been a tradition among British nobility to wear fabric embroidered in silver and gold on one's wedding day. Victoria bucked the trend by commissioning an extravagant white gown ornamented with flowers, probably to stand out in the crowd and show off her intricate lace embellishments. Her bridesmaids followed suit, and an engraved portrait of the ceremony helped spread the queen's fabulous image far and wide.

Why does the father "give away" the bride? Once upon a time, women were considered chattel, or human property. In some societies, a prospective groom paid a price to the lucky lady's parents in order to liberate her from their ownership. The custom of the father walking the bride down the aisle symbolized the transfer of authority from father to husband.

Why did the fourth digit come to be the "ring finger"? Egyptian rings of love were worn on the fourth finger of the left hand, which was believed to have a vein, later named vena amoris that ran directly to the heart. (This is no great achievement; all veins in the hand connect to the heart.) Other names for this throughout history: heart finger, annular finger, and leech finger. Dearly beloved, take your pick.
